Follow The Money: A collection of interconnected short stories.
by Ross Cavins
(RCG Publishing, July 2010)

"When morons strike it rich, they get dumber than ever."

From one of America's most unknown authors comes a book so humorous, so vile, so inane ... it could only be a cry for help.

"Follow the Money" is a collection of ten interconnected short stories that will grab you, wrestle you to the ground and squeeze you until your funny bone snaps in two.

A botched kidnapping, a money scam, a not-so-average convenience store holdup ... each story flows (with the money) through a series of interesting, and sometimes bizarre, plots. Layered and interweaved with seamless complexity, recurring characters and everyday motifs bind the ten stories into a single universal plot.

Ingenious in its conception, flawless in its execution, "Follow the Money" is a hilarious, detailed study on the many facets of the human condition. Greed, Pride, Lust ... the seven deadly sins have never been so entertaining.

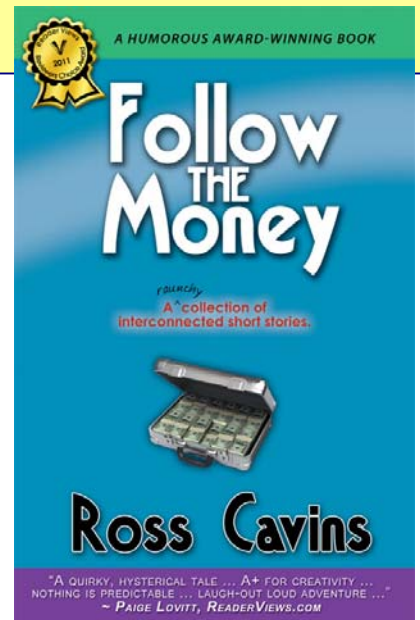

Prepare yourself for a raunchy, gritty ride you'll never want to end.

Ross Cavins has a BS in Computer Science from UNC Greensboro and currently works as a freelance website designer and internet programmer in the North Carolina Piedmont.

Two divorces and a mid-life crisis pushed him to pursue his life-long dream of writing a book. His primary goal is to one day visit a bookstore and hear, "Hey, is this you?" instead of, "Hey, you gonna pay for that?"

His work has appeared in Swill Magazine, Hiss Quarterly, USA Deep South, Hack Writers, Dead Mule, and elsewhere. He's much funnier in person.
